

southern Philippines last year, the group and its affiliates continue to pose a significant and evolving threat around the world.

The report states that ISIL is no longer focused on conquering and holding territory. It has been forced to adapt and focus primarily on smaller and more motivated groups of individuals who remain committed to inspiring, enabling and carrying out attacks. It is now organized as a global network with a flat hierarchy and less operational control over its affiliates.

Although it is difficult to assess with confidence the number of foreign terrorist fighters who remain in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, the flow of fighters to both countries has nearly come to a halt. However, returning foreign terrorist fighters, and those who relocate to other regions, continue to present a considerable threat to international security.

The report quantity and quality of its output continue to deteriorate. However, ISIL members and sympathizers are still able to use social media, including encryption technology and communication tools within the dark web, to communicate, coordinate and facilitate attacks.

ably weakened, largely owing to the fallen by more than 90 per cent since 2015.

However, ISIL is still able to generate income through extortion and control of checkpoints. A key concern is how to allow reconstruction and stabilization funds to flow into areas liberated from ISIL, while preventing these much-needed funds from ISIL continues to fund its affiliates, who are increasingly looking for ways to diversify their income and become financially independent. Money services, including exchange houses and money couriers, continue to be a preferred method for ISIL and its supporters to move funds across borders.

Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, its affiliates in Egypt have shown considerable resilience and pose a growing threat. ISIL remains determined to rebuild its capabilities in Libya and it continues to carry out sporadic attacks.

In West Africa, ISIL-related groups continue to operate in Mali and neighbouring countries. In East Africa, ISIL affiliates operating in Puntland and southern Somalia complicate the threat posed by Al-Shabaab.

Despite having been further degraded by Afghan and international military operations, ISIL in Afghanistan continues to mount aggressive attacks, especially in Kabul. ISIL affiliates have suffered significant setbacks in South-East Asia, most notably the loss of Marawi City in the southern Philippines.

Mr. President,

The rapidly evolving and transnational threat from ISIL presents a difficult challenge for Member States and the international community and underlines the vital importance of sharing information on the identity of returning and relocating foreign terrorist fighters. The ISIL and Al-Qaida Sanctions List remains one of the key global instruments in this regard.

I welcome the efforts of this Council over the past months to adopt several resolutions to help counter terrorist narratives; prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons; address the issue of accountability for crimes committed by ISIL in Iraq; disrupt human trafficking carried out by terrorist groups; and address the issue of foreign terrorist fighters through measures on border security, information-sharing and criminal justice. The focus now needs to be on implementing these new global norms.

Member States, the United Nations and international, regional and sub-regional organizations continue to strengthen existing tools, while also developing new ones, to address the evolving threat posed by ISIL.

Fourth, this is the first Secretary-General report on the threat posed by ISIL since the establishment of the Office of Counter-Terrorism. Last week, the Secretary-General approved the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Coordination Compact, which will help to deliver one of his key priorities of strengthening the coordination and coherence of the counter-terrorism efforts of the United Nations system. We are committed to stepping up our capacity building support to all Member States to enhance the implementation of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and relevant Security Council resolutions.

Mr. President,

The fight against ISIL and its affiliates is far from over. While there have been significant military successes over the past eight months, this remains a truly global challenge that demands an urgent and concerted multilateral response.

The Secretary-General welcomes the focus that the Security Council has put on this matter, and urges you to continue your efforts to further enhance multilateral cooperation to address the threats and challenges contained in this report.

Thank you, Mr. President.
