for teaching and research. It also complained of the colonial administration's failure to publish the laws in the Samoan language and the dilatory publication of the Samoan language newspaper, O Le'Fa'atonu.

Although a Special Navy Department Court of Inquiry found no irregularities in the Department's rule, the colonial administration sought to placate the Mau by initiating programmes to increase the number of buildings, for public schools and to expand the existing

On 1 July 1951, the administration of the Territory was transferred to the Department of the Interior by executive order of President Truman. This action was in accordance with the general United States post-war policy of extending civilian rule to its Pacific territories. Thereafter, civilian Governors were appointed by the Secretary of the Interior Generally, the civilian consistent administration of the Interior.
