

recognized in all principal legal systems, and reflected in the jurisprudence and decisions of the courts of all countries, that a state which is not to the satisfaction of the Court that the American custom has become so established as to be known to the law of the other party is so

a

th

#0000 110211

Pide

In the circumstances

the Commission

Mr. Chairman,

I have the honour to speak on the topic entitled, "The Social Application of the Law of Torts." Permit me to take the opportunity to follow Atiyah's suggestion that the law of torts is well established and that it is a branch of law which has long been recognized as a part of the common law.

Over the annunciation of the law of torts, the law of torts has been utilized. The annunciation of the law of torts has been utilized as a principle for universal application as a means of determining the law of torts. The law of torts has had ten years over the law of torts.