Mr Chaiam

We thank the Secretary -General for his helpful response to the activities of the Department of Public Information and the media. The Department of Public Information services and the Department of Public Information each have its own role to play. Like the Department of Public Information, the Department of Public Information has a role to play in the activities and policies of the Department of Public Information as well as the briefings by the management team of the Department. All the employees and briefings have enriched the capacity of Member States to participate in this process.

Mr Chaiam

The Zambian delegation is to discuss the importance of the Department of Public Information in the Member States in providing accurate information on the work of the United Nations and the Department bridges the gap between developed and developing countries in the information and communication technologies and to help balanced coverage and a right bias between the work of the agency and its perception because it is a social and cultural and intellectual life.

Mr Chaiam

You'll recall that the 2005 World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS) was held in Geneva, Switzerland, in December 2005. It was the first time that a global summit on the Internet had been held. The summit was organized by the United Nations and the World Economic Forum. It was a landmark event in the history of the Internet, as it brought together leaders from governments, the private sector, and civil society to discuss the future of the Internet and its impact on society. The summit resulted in the adoption of the Geneva Declaration, which set out a vision for the Internet as a global public good and a platform for sustainable development. The declaration also called for increased international cooperation and coordination to ensure the Internet's openness, interoperability, and security. The summit was a success, and it paved the way for future global discussions on the Internet and its impact on society.
