Part One

OVERVIEW OF TRENDS IN ACHIEVING GENDER AND WOMEN'S ADVANCEMENTS

The Government of the United Republic of Tanzania reaffirms its commitment to the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.

Soon after the Beijing Conference, the Government of Tanzania developed and adopted an action plan within the National Sub-Plan for women and Gender Advancement.

The position of women in leadership has also increased. There are more women in local councils now than before 1995, there are more women District Commissioners now in Tanzania than before 1995, and even at both regional and national levels the number of women leaders has increased since Beijing. No doubt the government intends to include more women in senior positions. There is a project under British Council and local NGOs to spearhead this commitment.

There are other projects including the project on Strengthening of discriminatory customary practices (e.g. FGM and Early marriage) and the Law Reform Commission to review existing laws that contain provisions which discriminate against women in Tanzania.

Programme for the women and Gender Advancement

The government of Tanzania is reviewing the Constitution and women have been active in proposing those crucial areas of concern that they want to be included in the new constitution. The process is still continuing and it is the hope of the government that the new constitution will contain provisions that are gender sensitive, giving women more opportunities to participate in the public life of the society.

Other laws which are currently being reviewed include the Law of Marriage Act of 1971 and others with the view to reformation to eradicate discrimination. As the government and coalition members improve the education and capacity for women more women will be promoted to higher levels in politics and administrative positions.

What is of crucial importance also is to follow-up the implementation of agreed critical issues in a vast country like Tanzania given the meagre resources in government budget.

Further actions and initiatives to be taken would include campaigns throughout the country on the revised and/or amended or newly enacted laws and other opportunities for women. Strengthen co-ordination of flow information throughout the country to monitor implementation of laws and to resist discrimination and violence against women. These actions would provide the Government with a better platform for advocacy and remedial measures to promote women's advancement and equality for women in the country currently under review.
